Newlyweds John and Akira were never madly in love. John decided to marry Akira on the basis that it was time to settle. They live a routine life in Roseland, a quiet middle-class suburb of Toronto. Akira befriends their conservative neighbors and demands that John fit her image of what a good husband should be, but it's not him. John devotes more time to his guitar than to his wife. Desperate for attention, Akira embarks on a lesbian love affair with her old high school classmate Kyla, only to find out Kyla is also a guitarist. Akira is trapped between two people who seem more passionate about their music than about her. Will Akira ever find happiness?
